

I am writing in opposition to the ruling that would allow further consolidation of local television stations under mega-corporations. I ask the simple question: Will this facilitate the exchange of information, political debate, and the development of culture or will it diminish these important things. A famous political scientist defined politics as "who gets what." The FCC decision seems all about giving more power to corporate magnates and less power to smaller companies, communities, non profit organizations, and individuals. Please try to reverse these policies of media consolidation and put America back on a democratic path.
